Takes Up Busy Life After Rest at

Prince Louis, admiral of the British cruiser squadron, returned yesterday from a couple of days spent in the quietude of the country at Colonel John Jacob Astor's place to a busy day here. He saw the horses at the horse show, escaping all the notice which his first visit attracted, finished his engagement with the American dentist, paid an informal call or two, attended Mrs. Astor's big dinner and for a nightcap went to the New-York Yacht Club. He slept at the Hotel Netherland.

On his arrival at the Grand Central Station he was met by August Belmont and a party of friends, and with them rode up and down the subway.

Colonel Astor's private car was attached to the 9:10 train from Rhinebeck for Prince Louis and the few of his staff who had accompanied him. He went from the Grand Central station to the Hotel Netherland, where he looked over his letters and answered many. Then he dressed for luncheon at Sherry's. After that he went down to the Garden. He was in civilian's clothes, and for about an hour after he entered the general public knew not that a prince was there. Prince Louis is fond of horses, and was greatly pleased with the horses yesterday.

After leaving the horse show Prince Louis went uptown, and for a couple of hours submitted to the ministrations of a dentist. Then he went back to the hotel to dress for Mrs.

British fleet will sail for Gibraltar at 9 a. m. Sunday, but the time of starting is rather uncertain. The Drake has finished coaling, but the other cruisers have barely begun, and there is delay in getting the Weish coal they use exclusively. Visitors continued to overrun the warships. On board the Drake, in the few hours after she had finished taking the bath rendered necessary from the coaling, several hundred visited her where she lies at the Cunard Line pier.

There was an informal reception, at which President Parsons introduced the British officers to the members of the Exchange, then took them around the place. After inspecting the museum they went to the Produce Exchange.

The prince went to the New-York Yacht Club from the Astor house, accompanied by John Jacob Astor. He was greeted by Secretary George H. Mr. Hitchcock is said to have an amusing rôle in this comedy, that of a clubman who acts as correspondent during the Graeco-Turkish war. Most of the other leading characters are Americans, but the scene, laid in the mountains of Greece, will furnish opportunity for a production full of color and atmosphere. Mr. Hitchcock had intended to try to revise Ade's "Bad Samaritan," but this endeavor will be abandoned now in favor of Mr. Davis's farce.

WILL NOT TRY CRAPSEY.

Heresy Charges Not Sustained by Majority Report of Committee.

[By Telegraph to The Trioune.]
Buffalo, Nov. 17.—The Rev. Dr. Algernon S. Crapsey, rector of St. Andrew's Protestant Episcopal Church, of Rochester, is not to be brought to trial for heresy and violation of rows on account of his theory of "spiritual interpretation" and advocacy of the opinions of the extreme rationalistic school of theology. Bishop William D. Walker of Western New-York, living in this city, has received a report to that effect from a majority of the committee of the ecclesiastical court appointed to investigate the charges. There is a minority report, which declares that Dr. Crapsey should be brought to trial on account of his utterances in a book entitled "Religion and Politics." It is like ly that the majority report will stand and that

Two months ago a committee composed of James W. Ashton, Edward M. Duff, Eugene J. Babcock Philip W. Mosher and Edwin S. Hoffman began an examination of the Rev. Dr. Crapsey's serme lectures, as published in his book, "Religion and Politics," and certain articles in "The Outlook," entitled "Honor Among Clergymen," and a reply to the Rev. Dr. Edward Abbott. After much cor-respondence the committee obtained two affidavits by presbyters of the diocese, setting forth conversations which they had had with Dr. Crapsey, in which he is said to have denied the Articles of the Christian faith and cast doubts upon the credibil ity of certain portions of the Gospel narrative. The only evidence offered in support of these conversations was the clergyman's published writings.

The Rev. Dr. Crapsey impresses us as being a man who easily surrenders himself to his intellectual vagaries, and the thing which for the time being appears to him to be true he advocates with remarkable eloquence. He has now taken up with the theory of "spiritual interpretation" and the opinions of the extreme rationalistic school of theology.

matter. Instead of keeping his ordination vow, he is substituting his own individual convictions for the Church's message, to the great grief and hurt of many of his brethren; he has introduced into the Church's pulpit opinions and theories upon which the scholarship of the Christian world is not agreed and which belong to the university and the theological school; he is subverting the doctrine and polity of the Church by claiming the right to teach in place of the doctrine as received by this Church whatever may appear to him individually to be true.

sideration of the affidavits they decided that it would be unwise and inquisitorial to found a charge f heresy upon statements of private conversations held without witnesses. The committee disagreed on the value as evidence of certain passages from 'Religion and Politics." Three members thought that the book did not contain sufficient evidence to secure a conviction in case of a trial for heresy. "The book is not professedly a doctrinal trea

"The book is not professedly a doctrinal treatise," they say, "but an effort to interpret the history of Christianity from the point of view of a certain critical school. It is difficult to determine whether a statement is meant to express the belief of the author, or whether he is expressing what he esteems a fact of history, or is stating the opinions of others. It abounds with rhesorical phrases, and much depends upon the meaning which the author assigns to this or that word."

The minority committeemen, Mr. Ashton and Mr. Duff, believe there are sufficient grounds for the presentment of the heresy charge and sufficient evidence to secure a conviction in case of trial.

They have two children, Prince Leopold, born November 3, 1901, and Prince Charles, had long contemplated renouncing his succession to the throne in favor of his son. The latter is one of the most popular members of the reigning House of Belgium. He is of a studious disposition, and bears a striking resemblance to his uncle, King Leopold. Prince Albert has travelled extensively. His wife also is very popular with the Belgians and there was great rejoiding when she presented her husband with a son and heir. The princess possesses a most engaging disposition, and is a great sportswoman, an excellent rider, a good

Prince Albert the present annual grant of $40,000 paid to the Count of Flanders as heir apparent, When the late count proposed to renounce his suc-cession, the Socialists, who have always denounced the count for accepting this grant, in view of the fact that he was enormously rich and had no use for the money, announced their intention of opposing in the strongest manner possible the transfer of the grant, though Prince Albert was dependent entirely upon his pay as an army officer and upon the generosity of the King, who is said to be the richest sovereign in the world. But it is possible that the dead count may have provided handsomely for Prince Albert, though he leaves two daughters, the Princess Henrictte, who married Princ Princess Josephine, whose husband is Prince Charles Antoine of Hohenzollern.

King Leopoid, in spite of his great wealth, receives a grant of $900,000 a year from the public treasury, and the Belgian Socialists declare this ought to be sufficient to support the King and the heir apparent. Finally, the Socialists assert that the King has a private fortune of at least $10,000,000, and that he should provide for the future of the dynasty out of his own money.

BIG GIFT TO LAFAYETTE.

Ralph Voorhees Gives $100,000 to College Endowment Fund.

[By Telegraph to The Tribune.] Easton, Penn., Nov. 17.—Ralph Voorhees, of Clinton, N. J., who recently gave $100,000 to Huron College, in South Dakota, has made a similar gift to Lafayette College, to be applied to the memorial endowment fund of the institution which the college aims to make $500,000 when the seventy-fifth anniversary exercises are celebrated, in 1907.

Ralph Voorhees, the philanthropist, who has been bling many years, has been widely known for his generous gifts. April 3, 1905, he gave $50,000 to the American Tract Society; in December, 1904, he gave $100,000 to Marysville College, Tennessee; in all, he gave $60,000 to Rutgers College. His last gift to Rutgers College was on November 13, 1904, when he was informed by President Austin Scott that there was a deficit of $9,000. Mr. Voor-Scott that there was a deficit of $9,000. Mr. Voorhees agreed to make this good. Later it was learned that $5,000 was necessary to furnish the building. Mr. Voorhees agreed to give $1,000 if the alumni would give $4,000 within forty-eight hours. The $4,000 was raised within the stipulated time.

On March 23, 1801, he gave $25,000 to the Carroll College, at Waukessa, Wis., in addition to $50,000 given to that institution by him many years previous. Mr. Voorhees's gift to the American Tract Society is subject to annuity for Mr. and Mrs. Voorhees during their lives.

ROYALTY'S NESTOR. Strange Career of Luxemburg's Ruler. Now Dead.

of all the sovereignties in Europe there is nonthat is more sleepy and uninteresting and which in ordinary times is so generally forgotten as the grand duchy of Luxemburg. True, it has scasionally been selected as the scene of more or less sensational novels of "The Prisoner of zenda" order, and its court and government have likewise furnished the theme for some popplar comic operas. But it is only at long interrals that occasion arises which compels people to take this petty state seriously. In 1868 it brought Germany and France to the verge of war, which was averted largely through the instrumentality of a Pennsylvania woman who played a notable, though not altogether reppuble, role in the life of the late King William of Holland. About a year before the latter's death in 1890 a contretemps occurred which was of such an extraordinary and ridiculous a character that it constituted a subject of laughter throughout the length and breadth of Europe, and now once more the tiny grand duchy, with its population of 200,000 and its area of a couple of thousand square kilometres has be come a subject of interest through the demise yesterday of Grand Duke Adolph. Since Emperor William of Germany was gathered to his fathers, in 1888, Grand Duke Adolph of Luxemburg has been the Nestor of the reigning houses of Europe, being senior to the late Queen victoria, to the aged Prince Regent of Bavaria, and even to that patriarchal monarch King Christian of Denmark. Moreover, he started reigning before any ruler now living, succeeding to his father's crown of Nassau in 1839. Not that he spent the six and sixty years that have clarsed since then upon the throne, Near a quarter of a century thereof was passed in exile as an ex-sovereign, and it was only in the eventide of his extraordinary career that he became once more possessed of a sceptre and of a crown. The grand duke leaves an only son, fifty-eight years old, so enormously fat and of such colossal girth that he will have no difficulty in securing recognition as a weighty factor in what is known as the "concert of kings." As he has siready had two strokes of apoplexy, it is exremely improbable that his tenure of the throne of Luxemburg will be of a prolonged character, and when he in turn is gathered to his fathers it is the eldest one of his six daughters, namely, the now eleven-year-old Princess Marie, who will become Grand Duchess of Luxemburg in her own right, and thus constitute an addition to the Roman Catholic sovereigns of the Old World. For, although the young princess's father and grandfather have both been Lutherang, her mother, the Infanta Marie of Braganza, daughter of the late ex-King Miguel of Portugal, is a devout adherent of the Church of Rome, besides being a very beautiful woman, She absolutely declined to give her hand in marriage to the Crown Prince of Luxemburg unless he agreed to permit all the children born to the union to be brought up in her faith. A good deal of nonsense has been printed concerning the succession to the crown of Luxemburg, much of the misapprehension of the subject arising from the fact that on the demise of the late King William of the Netherlands, who was likewise Grand Duke of Luxemburg, his daughter, Queen Wilhelmina, though duly qualified to follow him on the Dutch throne, was declared barred, both by the laws of Luxemburg and by the family statutes of the House of Nassau, from the crown of Luxemburg, to which ex-Duke Adolph of Nassau was proclaimed York; the successor. People have naturally imagined that since Queen Wilhelmina, by reason of her sex, was excluded from the sovereignty of Luxemburg the daughters of the new ruler of Luxemburg (he has no male issue) would be similarly ineligible to succeed their father. This is not the case, however. For about five years ago the Luxemburg government published in "The Official Gazette" a note stating that, in accordance with Clause 42 of the family statutes of the sovereign House of Nassau, confirmed by the national laws of the Grand Ducky of Luxemburg, "in the event of the extinction of the male line, the eldest daughthe extinction of the extinction of ter of the last male survivor, or failing daughters the sister or nearest female blood relation, stall be entitled to the succession to the throne. The father of young Princess Marie-that is to say, the new Grand Duke of Luxemburg-is the last male survivor of the historic House of Nassau, his father's only brother, Prince Nicholas of Passau, having died a few weeks ago. It is, therefore, Princess Marie who is clearly entitled to the Crown of Luxemburg, and all the speculations which have been indulged in as to the ultimate fate of the throne of the grand ducty on the death of the late and the present grand dukes without male issue, and the assertions which have been made that Luxemburg would either be converted into a republic or into a "Reichsland" and incorporated in the German Empire on much the same footing as Alsace and

Lerraine should be dismissed as unworthy of serious consideration. Luxemburg occupies so strategically important a position on the borders of France and Germany that neither of these two nations can wlerate it in the possession of the other, and rather than submit thereto would go to war, Indeed, the controversy of 1868, to which I have alluded above, was caused by the project of King William of Holland to sell the grand duchy to Napoleon III. The sale would have been compieted had it not been for an indiscretion on the part of Mme. Musard, to whom the King had cautiously communicated his plans. There are all sorts of stories current as to the motives which prompted Elise Musard to betray the confidence of the King. But whatever the reason, whether it was through financial greed or for the sake of some feminine spite against the Emperor Napoleon and Empress Eugenie, she placed Prince Bismarck's agents at Paris in possession of the secret, and within twenty-four hours a Lolification arrived from Berlin to the effect that if the sale was concluded Prussia would at once cross the Rhine and invade France. Neither Napoleon nor King William was at first disposed to yield to this threat. But the other powers, notably England, intervened in the interests of peace, and the matter was referred to an international congress which took place shortly afterward in London. It decided against the sale and at the same time secured from Prussia the withdrawal of her troops from the grand duchy and the dismantlement of the fortifications of the city of Luxemburg. Of course, after this the King and Mme. Musard Parted company. She died blind and demented In the sanatorium of Dr. Blanche, of Paris, and after her demise there was a considerable

One of the oddest tnings in connection with the reign of Grand Duke Adolph in Luxemburg was the manner of its inauguration. It may be remembered that King William, about a year before his demise actually took place, fell into a cataleptic trance which so closely resembled death that the latter was officially announced. Not only were all the churches and public edices in Holland and Luxemburg draped with black, but proclamations were issued announcing the King's demise and the accession of his daughter Wilhelmina in the Netherlands and of his coucin Adolph of Nassau in Luxemburg. Adolph actually arrived from Vienna, had made his triumphal entry as sovereign into the city government there when suddenly the startling hews was received that King William was not dead, that he had recovered full consciousness that large American battleships. of Luxemburg and had assumed the reigns of and that he was wild with indignation at what he described the "indecent haste" which had been manifested by his ministers, court dignitaries and in particular by his cousin, Adolph of Nassau. The latter, much dismayed, left Luxemburg hastily under the cover of night, returning to Germany, and when the King really died a year later he would not believe the news or set out for Luxemburg to assume the throne until he had been convinced that William had been duly entombed and was incapable of returning to life.

Adolph of Luxemburg was one of the richest sovereigns in Europe, his immense fortune being derived from the public gambling tables at Wiesbaden, which until 1866 were farmed out to the Blancs, now of Monte Carlo, and yielded to the ducal house of Nassau even still larger revenues than those obtained to-day by the Prince of Monaco from the public gambling tables at the casino at Monte Carlo. After the battle of Sadowa, in which the Duke of Nassau took part as an ally of Austria, his dominions were annexed by Prussia, which at the same time abolished the public gambling at Wiesbaden. The duke retired to Austria, where he spent the following four and twenty years with all the luxuries and comforts which his wealth placed within his reach, treated with the utmost distinction by the Court of Vienna on account of the loss of his throne of Nassau. which he had sustained in behalf of Austria. and free from all the responsibilities and troubles incidental to rulership. Indeed, it may be questioned whether he was not far happier in his role of a monarch in partibus at Vienna than afterward as Grand Duke of Luxemburg. In his day he was celebrated as the finest fourin-hand whip in Europe, and was wont to insist upon driving in this fashion even long after his failing sight and strength had rendered it a matter of difficulty for him to manage the team. Moreover, he always insisted on having pretty women beside him on the box, to whom he used to pay more attention than to his horses, and this led to many accidents, including several fractures of the leg, of the arm and of the collarbone, besides cuts and bruises galore, all sustained after he had passed his seventy-fifth

It has long been the custom of Irving's detractors to impute his professional success to that source. Mr. Burdett-Coutts says.

The sting in the suggestion which I have dealt with is that it deprives Henry Irving of one of his greatest attributes—his pure and generous loyalty to his art. Apart from his brilliant gifts of intellect and unrivalled power over the emotions, it was this which made him really great, that he was a great artist. He denied nothing to this noble cause. No sordid object of gain, no consideration of even common prudence, could stand for a moment in the way of its pursuit. Over and over again he produced plays whose success was more than doubtful, and repeated others which had been financial failures, all for the sake of the art to which he felt he could give a complete expression. In his great service, hiding his troubles and asking from no man, he staked all he won and spent all he possessed.

JOHN GIBB'S WILL PROBATED.

Babylon, Long Island, Nov. 17.-The will of John of Brooklyn and West Islip, was admitted to probate by Surrogate Joseph M. Bellord here to-day. Mr. Gibb was a member of the firm of Mills & Gibb, of New-York, and was also interested in the Frederick Loeser store in Brooklyn. His catate is said to amount to $2,000,000. Mrs. Gibb retate is said to amount to saturous. Mrs. Gibb re-ceives a life interest in nearly all of the estate, which at her death goes to her children and the children of two dead sons, Edwin and Howard Gibb. The witnesses to the will were Frederick D. Taylor and Frederick A. Valentine of Brooklyn.
